II. LIBRARY STUDIES

The role according to Soekanto (2004) that; the importance of the role because it governs one's behavior to some extent can predict the actions of others. Roles cover three thing:

- Roles include the norms required by the position or place of a person in society. The role in this sense is the set of rules that guide a person in the life of society
- Role is a concept of what an individual can do in society as an organization.
- The role can also be said to be an important individual behavior for the social structure of society.

So that role is role which is dynamic aspect of status (Status). When a person exercises his rights and obligations in accordance with his position he performs a role. The distinction between position and role is for the benefit of science. Both can't be separated because one depends on the other and vice versa. No role without position, or position without role.

Further, Emil Salim in Supriatna (2000: 124) that there are five characteristics of poverty itself:

- The poor generally do not have their own production factors.
- No possibility to obtain production assets. with his own strength.
- The education level of pa is generally low.
- Many of them have no facilities.
- Among them are trying to be relatively young and have no adequate skills or education.

III. RESEARCH METHODS

This study uses qualitative methods with descriptive analysis, which describes and describes the events, behavior of people or circumstances in specific places in detail and in depth in the form of narration. Role is: Viewing the concept as an estimate of what is expected of a person in a particular position more attributed to the personal nature of the individual rather than with his position. There are two things that are clearly included in the role and not the position of responsibility and authority.
